WORKING ALONGSIDE INUIT YOUTH CLIMATE LEADERS: CREATIVE METHODS AS REPAIR?

JEN BAGELMAN, UNIVERSITY OF NEWCASTLE

This talk traces a creative methodological journey developed through a collaborative project with Inuit youth climate leaders. Guided by the Inuit concept of unikkausivut - embodied storytelling - this project experiments with nail-art, filmmaking, and community mural work to confront colonial spatial politics, and envision alternative climate futures. I consider how participatory, feminist arts-based methods offer opportunities for practices of repair: unsettling extractive research norms by centring relationality, accountability, and reciprocity. Honouring the National Inuit Strategy on Research and longstanding Inuit holistic ways of knowing, the talk reflects on the pedagogical potential of making together, demonstrating how creative collaboration can cultivate more ethical research.
